NATIONAL & WORLD NEWS

- ◆ Michele Bachmann has given her endorsement to Mitt Romney, 119 days after she dropped out of the Republican presidential race. Bachmann says Romney is the "last chance we have to keep America from going over a cliff."
- ◆ A new poll shows Mitt Romney has pulled into a virtual tie with President Obama in the crucial swing states of Ohio and Florida. But the poll gives Obama a solid lead in Pennsylvania.
- ◆ The number of people seeking unemployment benefits fell last week by the most in nearly a year, a hopeful sign that hiring could increase in coming months. On Wall Street, The Dow Jones Industrial Average was down 61.98 at 13,206.59.
- ◆ Levi Johnston, former fiancé of Bristol Palin and father of their child, has another baby on the way and plans to name her after his favorite pistol. Johnston says he and his girlfriend will name their baby "Breeze Beretta" after the Italian handgun.
- ◆ In Tokyo, Japan, a pet parakeet has been returned to its owner after the lost bird told police where it lived. The bird blurted out the names of the city and district where its owner's house is located and then produced the street number as astonished police listened. The bird's owner taught her address to the parakeet in case the bird got lost.
