Scenes from the Big Blizzard

Today marks the 25th anniversary of the Blizzard of '93. About 19 inches of snow fell overnight on March 13, 1993. Roads were impassible, people were stranded in their homes for several days, and electricity was out for up to a week for some residents of the Athens area. The weight of the snow destroyed several barns and chicken houses. All this happened in the days before digital cameras and Facebook. Few people had cell phones. Cable TV was off the air. The major source of information came from battery powered radios listening to WYXI, WJSQ, and WLAR in Athens, WCLE in Cleveland, and WYGO in Madisonville, who simulcast to provide news coverage of the road conditions, power outages, emergency rescue efforts, information about shelter, and live phone calls. The National Guard was activated to help rescue people who were stranded in their homes. The photos below give some idea of the amount of snow that fell.

◆ ANOTHER BLIZZARD PHOTO

We're moving soon - but not too far.
We look forward to seeing you at our new location at 200 Decatur Pike in Athens, beginning Monday, March 19.
