Woman Arrested at NC School

Athens City Police say a woman faces assault charges after an incident that put North City school on lockdown on Wednesday. According to police, a woman identified as Tashea Gordon of Athens, walked into the lobby of North City Elementary School, pacing and "acting erratically." Police say she was screaming loudly and calling for help. When a staff member tried to talk with her, she tried to force her way into the secure area of the school where students and classrooms are located. Several staff members struggled with her to keep her from entering, while another staff member called police. Officer Randy Queen arrived on scene about a minute after being dispatched. He and other officers took Gordon into custody. During the struggle, several staff members received minor injuries. Gordon was taken to the hospital and then booked into the McMinn County Jail on charges of assault, disorderly conduct, and public intoxication. Bond was set at $5,000. After the situation was cleared, the school held an assembly to explain to the students what had happened.
